Leo Frank Takes Stand Again Despite Objection of Dorsey The Atlanta Constitution (1881-2001); Aug 21, 1913; ProQuest Historical Newspapers Atlanta Constitution (1868 - 1945) - 99: -

Leo Frank Takes Stand Again Despite Objection of Dorsey

In concluding the defense's case Attorney Arnold stated to the court that there were two or three matters which had developed to which he considered the defendant had a right to make a statement in rebuttal.

A protest was made by the solicitor, but was overruled.

Frank took the stand following the Judge's decision. He was more vehoment in tone than on the day of his statement, but was brief, concise and straight to the point. Ho occupied the chair only a few moments.

"The statement of the Turner boy," he said, looking at the jury, "Is uttorly faise, The girls who say they saw no talking to Miss Phagan and that I called her 'Mary' are mistaken. It is completely faise that I went into a dressing room with Miss Carson, She is a lady of unblemished character so far as I know."

With which he resumed his soat.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduction prohibited without permission.